MR. LOUIS MAAS'S CONCERT.

Miller Hall was well filled last Tuesday night, but it should have been crowded to the doors, for a more pleasant chamber concert than that which was given it would be difficult to find. The trio of artists—Messrs. Maas, Kneisel and Giese—were perfectly balanced, and had evidently rehearsed faithfully. The Beethoven sonata in G major, op. 30, for violin and piano, went exquisitely, the minuet being especially well played. It is well to teach the public that Becthoven wrote other violin sonatas beside the "Kreutzer," which latter work has seemingly pushed all its charming sisters into oblivion. The Schubert rondo was not so perfect, Mr. Kneisel lacking breadth and fire in some portions, although always playing with his usual purity of intonation and refinement of phrasing. Mr. Giese's performance of the rather threadbare "Nina," by Pergolese, and Schubert's "Moment Musicale" in arrangements for violoncello was in the highest degree satisfactory. Such sympathetic tone, such perfection of shading, and such ease of performance can be expected only of this great artist, and he was in his best vein at this concert, winning a very imperative encore for the last-named selection. The concert culminated in Rubinstein's trio in B flat, in which the three artists made a great impression. As in all Rubinstein's works of this character, the piano was very prominent and had the lion's share of the work, but in the adagio the lovely duet between violin and cello was given with ineffable sweetness by Mr. Kneisel and Mr. Giese, and in the tarantella-like scherzo, the ensemble was not in the least disturbed by the speed at which it was taken, and the contrast with the trio was made the most of, as also were the dainty effects at the return to, and close of the scherzo. Altogether a chamber concert which attained the juste milieu between the popular and classical view. Conner Jay 30/87
